

Healthpoint Dermatology Becomes “CORIA Laboratories, Ltd.”

Ft. Worth, TX – January 4, 2005 — Healthpoint Dermatology, a division of DFB Pharmaceuticals, is changing its name to CORIA Laboratories, Ltd., according to company president, Stephen W. Clark. Mr. Clark, who took over the helm of Healthpoint Dermatology in January 2004, believes the new name more clearly expresses the vision of the company.

“In every way, CORIA Laboratories is a new enterprise,” said Mr. Clark. “It is a company with a serious mission to innovate in dermatology. We derived our new name from ‘corium’, the Latin word for “true skin”, and we plan to make a serious imprint on the treatment of diseases that affect skin, hair and nails.”

Healthpoint Dermatology has introduced several innovative products over the past three years; products such as Salex™ Cream and Lotion (salicylic acid 6%), Ovace® (sodium sulfacetamide 10%) Wash and Foam, Cloderm® (clocortolone pivate cream 0.1%), Akne-Mycin® (erythromycin 2%) and TheraSeal® Hand Protectant. “We have an impressive pipeline of products in the offerings,” comments Mr. Clark, “and we want our name to reflect our promise to the specialty.”

Healthpoint Dermatology, now CORIA Laboratories, is one the few companies in dermatology that does not outsource its research & development and manufacturing. By having these two critical components of product development under one roof, explained Mr. Clark, the company is better able to conceptualize a product and turn it into a reality. “CORIA Laboratories has a very tenured and effective management team,” said Mr. Clark. “Our new name sets a benchmark for excellence and everyone is very excited about the possibilities.”
